Beth Simmons is a professor of government at Harvard University and an expert in international relations and international law. Her talk will address the factors that affect why nations sign human rights treaties and reflect on when the refusal to sign is justified.